U.S. grocery shoppers are on track to snap up the most expensive meat and produce of any year in recent history, according to the National Retail Federation. If you're shopping this Thanksgiving for the perfect turkey, chances are you won't be getting what you thought you were buying. It's "against the law" to sell turkeys that aren't properly identified, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and the government monitors the information on those tags. It can be difficult for consumers to discern between beef and pork or to find the price tag for an individual piece of meat. After tracking turkey prices from 2008 to 2018, the NRF found that the average price of a 20-pound turkey rose from $10.78 to $13.86, while the price of a pound of ground turkey was up from $2.64 to $3.26. Not so long ago, most turkeys sold by grocery stores were merely big frozen dinners with a sign saying "Turkey," said NRF chief economist Jack Manning. "Shoppers quickly learned they could find out what the specific bird was they 3e33713323
