Psychiatric evaluation of neurologically impaired preterm infants during their hospitalization. The development of psychiatric evaluation procedures for neurologically impaired preterm infants during their hospitalization was described. A psychiatric screening and evaluation procedure was developed which included a logbook in which an occupational therapist and a pediatric nurse observed preterm infants during activity assessments using the Caregiver and the General Activity Levels. The results of observations were used to develop a description of the preterm infant's behavior, which was then used to assess the behavior of preterm infants during three types of activities (mealtime, diaper changes, and daily reassessment). Preterm infants exhibiting signs of a behavioral problem were identified and referred to the pediatrician for further assessment. Subsequent to referral to a pediatrician, the infants were evaluated with a psychiatric assessment interview. The results of the psychiatric assessments and the neonatal neurological evaluation are described. The findings of the psychiatric evaluation are discussed in the context of the medical and developmental findings. According to the report, an analysis of data from the National Occupational Mortality Surveillance System indicates that the rates of occupational deaths are declining among employees with access to workplace safety and health programs, while the rates of occupational deaths have increased among those without such access. The report used data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics' National Bureau of Occupational Safety and Health to assess the relationship between occupational safety and health program access and occupational deaths and injuries in 2007. The report, released today, found that occupational deaths and injuries among workers who had access to workplace safety and health programs declined by 20% from 2007 to 2008. The number of occupational deaths and injuries declined from 26,484 in 2007 to 23,879 in 2008. This marked the first time that rates of occupational deaths have declined in the 21 years the National Occupational Mortality Surveillance System has been in existence. The authors of the report believe that increased workplace safety and health programs are part of the reason for the decline in occupational
